ASSIGNING CHARACTERS: The host assigns the character roles to the players. Do not ask your players to choose their character roles. This is far too much work, confusing, and nearly impossible for them to pick a separate character and fill the required player spots with the most dependable, outgoing people. Therefore, the host assigns the character roles using the host character list (above).

Each character, in the left-hand column, will say ‘REQUIRED’ or ‘Optional.’ First, assign the required characters to your most outgoing and dependable players. Then, use the optional players in any combination or not at all—they are optional and do not have to be played. Optional players share the same materials and participation level but are not required for the storyline to play out or for the mystery to be solved. They are suspects, however. These players usually don't realize that their character is optional during play.

If you have time, sending a ‘save the date’ email/text/card at least a month before your party is great. That way, you can see if your intended date will work to have enough players. No time for that? No problem! Just text your closest invitees to confirm they can attend, so you can assign them to a required player.

It is suggested that more players than required be invited, as some required players may cancel at the last minute.

The host should play an optional player – especially for first-timers. You'll be the first line of defense for a no-show required player and slip into a missing required role if needed. But nothing stops you from playing a required role if you want to – just be sure to read all instructions and be fully prepared for the big day.
